MR. HIPPLE'S LETTER.

"Now, Miss or - Miss -" "Fosdick." "Thanks, very much! Now, Miss Fosdick, in commencing your work as a stenographer for the firm of Poplin & Son it is necessary for me to instruct you as to your duties. I have charge of the house's correspondence - entire charge, my name, Miss Fosdick, is Hipple."

"Yes, Mr. Hipple," the girl replied meekly. "In the first place," Mr. Hipple went on, leaning back in his chair so as to expand his chest to the utmost of facility, and twisting the ends of his moustache with both hands as he spoke; "in the first place, I always insist on my stenographer taking me down verbatim and it works cheaply."

"Well, Miss Fosdick, I have had the house's correspondence in my hands for several years, and both Mr. Poplin have come to rely implicitly upon me. Indeed, I do not really see how this department could move along without me."

"I think I can say, Miss Fosdick," the young man proceeded as he settled himself more comfortably in his chair, "and I think I can say it without the slightest egotism or desire to boast, that I have made the letters of Poplin & Son famous through the business world as models of English composition and ornate diction."

"The idea!" exclaimed Mr. Poplin, to his son, the junior member, half an hour later, when he laid the whole matter before him. "The idea that a stenographer should be so generally admired in our establishment is an idea which I never heard of before."

"I am not at all surprised," said Mr. Hipple, "that you should be so generally admired in our establishment. It is a natural result of the fact that you have made the letters of Poplin & Son famous through the business world as models of English composition and ornate diction."

WOMAN'S WORLD.

TOPICS OF INTEREST IN THE HOME AND DOMESTIC CIRCLE. "I know what you're going to say," she said, "and I'm not going to let you say it."

"I know what you're going to say," she said, "and I'm not going to let you say it." "You're not going to let me say that?" "No, I'm not going to let you say that."

"I know what you're going to say," she said, "and I'm not going to let you say it." "You're not going to let me say that?" "No, I'm not going to let you say that."

HISTORY OF HYPNOTISM.

Its Origin in India and its Progress up to Date. How largely European thought has turned toward the subject of hypnotism is shown by the facts that there are two schools and half a dozen societies devoted exclusively to its study.

"I know what you're going to say," she said, "and I'm not going to let you say it." "You're not going to let me say that?" "No, I'm not going to let you say that."

JUPITER'S NEW MOON.

The recent discovery of a fifth satellite of Jupiter by Prof. Barnard, of the Lick Observatory, has provoked the sensation of the astronomical world. Two other astronomers, Professors Carlgren and Coolidge, have set up a claim to a prior discovery of this fifth moon of Jupiter, but this claim is made ridiculous by the fact that neither of the astronomers have an instrument large enough to see the new moon.

THE WRAPPER NOT A SAFE GUIDE FOR CIGARS AND MILK.

A light cigar is not always a light one - that is to say, light color does not invariably indicate light flavor. There is an impression to the contrary among smokers; and it is the invariable habit of non-smokers to refer to a dark-colored cigar as strong, malignant and diabolic.
